NANCY'S CONVERSION.

There were wonderful times in the settlement. A revival that affred the sountry from center to circumference was in progress. All day long teams througed the thicket about the little log church, reaching far out into the clearing until it looked not unlike a pub-He sale day at the country court house. Tobe Jenkim sat in his wagon outside the circle of verticles. Hie preferred the open air to the stuffy lattic room over-crowded to suffocation, and the voice of the preacher reached him distinctly where he sat in his wagon under the limbs of a spreading pine.

A neighbor drew up alomiside of Jen-kins, glancing humorously at the three boards placed crosswise the wagon body; that had served his family for seats during the ten-mile drive to

The neighbor looked serious. He approached Jenkins' wagon and resting the toe of his brogan upon the hub of a front wheel leaned forward comfortation, gave a deprecatory squirt of tokaco juice before asking in a confidential undertone:

Meanwhite the perverse object, the above conversation sat on the portion of a smooth-worn log that did duty for a back step to her father's log kitchen, calmly skelling peas. A siender brown thumb was inserted into one end of the pod and its contents outsed in a very skillful, professional manner. A great pile of the green shales cluttered the white sand about her feet, among which two or three very fat, ginttonous dorkins searched inquirilusly or fought clumsily for any pea that escaped from the blue, homespun lap of Nance. "Anyhow," she remarked to herself, "it's a heap cooler and pleasanter here than it is a sectifi up in meetin' a boilin' an' a listenin' to a ol' cavort." Through the feathery branches of the elm the sun flitered softis, lying on the smooth white sand beneath in pleasant shadows of mixed sun and shade. Among the branches the mockingbirds and cardinals kept up a rival concert. Under the trues in the deep shade east by the lean-to kitchen it was very cool and pleasant, but beyond, over the rields of shillant whispering, rank growing corn and blooming cotton, the heat rose dancing and quivering, rising and falling, as if in idabolical glee, with each waft of the heavy, heat laden air. The harsh jarring of a wagon broke in upon the crooning sounds. It was the family returning from church. Humbling up the weedy drive the six girls and the mother trooped out of the grouning wagon and into the kitchen with much high-pitched chatter.

"You ought a bin thar, Nance." "Such preachin! I never heard." "If you were to go you'd git 'ligion shure number to make, but Nance said nothing; she had pulled the crane from the big fire-place and was dishing up the contents of the steaming pots, with quick, deft passes, the other women looking on appreciatingly, but forbearing to soil their Sunday floerly by lending a hand. Nancy scarcely heeded their chatter, you only feet the process of the steaming pots, with quick, deft passes, the other women looking on appreciatingly, but forbearing to soil their study floerly

Certainly, for the mechanic, human Ingenuity has never produced a better liniment than Salvation Oil, which now stands unexcelled for curing his sprains and bruises caused by a fall; or cuts and wounds the result of an accident with his tool or saw. Salvation Oil always kills pain. "Recently, I fell about twenty feet and was very much bruised on my leg and side, but after bathing them with Salvation Oil the bruises soon disappeared. "If you was to hear him just once tonight, I'd he referred him just once tonight, I'd he referred handy. Nancy, honey," and a rough hand was laid on her short, rebellious, straggling lock, "Go with me an' yer maw to-night," he continued, earnestly, "an' if uns don't like the talk yan can stay away the balance of the time. Won't you, honey," and, a brilliant idea striking him, he added: "Do thishler fer yer o'l papan'you'll git the finest frock of any gail in thishler settlement."

"Sure enough, paw," asked Nancy, anxiously but doubtraily.

"As sure as shootin," answered the old man, solemnly.

"Then I'll go," resolutely, "an' git ligion, too, sure's you'we born," and Nancy laughed heartily at the picture her own fancy conjured up.

"And, Nancy, honey," the old man began, diffidently, laying one horny hand upon her rough hair, "if yah on'y could—about Jale, you know."

The girl moved quickly from beneath the caressing hand.

"Then I couldn't, paw," more than sharply, "a skeery shoat afeerd o' his own shadder," and all Nancy's white teeth were displayed at the recollection of her lover's extreme diffidence.

The old man forbore to press the point, contenting himself with the concession already made, and true to her summerly bravery, took her seat in the wagon with her sisters and mother next Sunday morning and was driven to hear the convlncing eloquence of the new divine. It was a trying day for the poor girl her father's evident pleastre at the prospect of his daughter's conversion, her mother's outspoken surprise and the good-natured jibes of the other girls did not tend to make it any easier for her.

Nancy took a seat timidly with a few other young girls of her own age on the women's side of the church. A local preacher was storming the catadel with voelferous, incoherent torrent of prayer, more sartiest perhaps than eloquent, and the girl listened intently, her face white, her dark eye

Only good, to him as well as to the country can come from knowledge so gained. It is doubted, indeed, if success in the presidential office can be achieved if this knowledge, for any cause, is denied the incumbent. If the man who is the representative of all the people withdraws himself from intimate communication with them, and confers about people's business with onley a few personal friends, he cannot hope for his performances to touch either the popular heart or the popular imagination.

There is no espiiousness, but only the simple truth, in the statement that Mr. Cleveland in the White House suffered from the effect of his inaccessibility. In accessible he was, to the greater degree than any other man who has resided in very many years. The question of responsibility for this is a minor question. The fact remains that, for some cause, the people felt thmselves shut out, and even a large number of senators and representatives, with important business to take them there, made their visits with refuctance, some of these did not go back the second time. Nearly all of them complained of the atmosphere of exclusivemens pervading the White House, and which made it difficult and even unpleasant to spend any time there.

The result was that only a very few men had access to Mr. Cleveland, and tiwas largely through them that he informed himself as to the popular sentiment and which. There grew up, indeed, a sort of Cleveland Trust, through which and by which the very small number w
